Lauren - can you tell me what form the court generated form comes in? Can you provide a sample of what the form looks like?

One of the features of PbK is the ingestion of court form data, however, it is dependent upon how the form is structured. It would be helpful for me to have an example. This feature may cost additional money but might be much less than what was quoted for manual preparation.

Thank you.
Chris

It depends on the Court. The Circuit Court form is a computer generated form, but it scanned into the system. The District Court form is a handwritten form, still scanned into the system.

Basic information is manually entered into the new system (i.e. the ultimate sentence, or if a plea is entered, but the terms of the plea agreement or if it is a plea based on a plea offer vs a plea as charged, is not entered. In essence the fact a plea is entered, but provides no context of how that plea came about). Minimal information was entered into the old system and it inconsistently transferred from the old system to the new system due to the two systems not speaking to one another. We have not reentered this information because we don't have time and can be obtained from Court records if absolutely necessary (it is rarely needed).
